(ST LOUIS.)

THE situation of this new Establishment is convenient for travellers, in the centre of business, and, from the elevation of the ground, dry and healthy. The improvements already made are considerable. The dining room particularly, is 44 feet long, by 21.—Every exertion will be made by the proprietor, to give satisfaction to travelers or residents, who will honour his house with their custom.—At present considerable difficulty is experienced in obtaining marketing, owing perhaps to the very great and continual emigration to this country; but the proprietor flatters himself that, with the stock of provisions already on hands, he will be able to accommodate his guests amply. The house stands on a beautiful and extensive lot, which will be laid out as a Pleasure Garden, ornamented with handsome walks, and summer houses for the recreation of gentlemen during the summer season, and furnished with Liquors Fruit, Wines, Ice Creams, Cakes and Pastry, of every description.

A billiard-room is attached to the establishment In order that the house may be kept with regularity and good order, a printed copy of the Regulations will be put up in every room.

The prices will be moderate.

On the back of the lot is a Livery Stable, which will shortly come into the possession of the proprietor of the Hotel, and will be well furnished with provender, and attended by careful and obliging hostlers.

ADVENTURES OF LADY ACKLAND.

FROM THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Among the romantic incidents of real life, few surpass the adventures of lady Harriet Ackland, who accompanied her husband Major Ackland in Gen. Burgoyne's unfortunate campaign of 1777. An entire generation has nearly passed away since the declaration of American Independence The events of our revolutionary war, familiar to those who were actors in its scenes, are becoming, like the tales of "the days beyond the flood," to the existing race. The memory of those times that "tried men's souls" is revived by the perusal of General Wilkinson's Memoirs, who corrects a mistatement in the pathetic tale of Lady Harriets' story, so admirably delineated by General Burgoyne in his "State of the expedition from Canada, as laid before the House of Commons in 1780" The account of General Burgoyne is first introduced, and General Wilkinson's relation concludes a scene unrivalled in interest by any section of ancient or modern romance.

General Burgoyne's Narrative of Lady Harriet Ackland's Adventures.

"Besides the continuation of difficulties and general fatigue, this day, (9th October, 1777) was remarkable for a circumstance of private distress too peculiarly affecting to be omitted. The circumstance to which I allude is Lady Harriet Ackland's passage through the enemy's army to attend her wounded husband, then their prisoner.

"The progress of this lady with the army could hardly be thought abruptly or superfluously introduced, were it only so for the purpose of authenticating a wonderful story.—It would exhibit if well delineated, an interesting picture of the spirit, the enterprize, and the distress of romance, realized and regulated upon the chaste and sober principles of rational love and connubial duty.

"Lady Harriet Ackland had accompanied her husband to Canada in the beginning of the year 1776. In the course of that campaign she had traversed a vast space of country, in different extremities of season, and with difficulties that an European traveller will not easily conceive; to attend, in a poor hut at Chamblee, upon his sick bed, her husband.

"In the opening of the campaign in 1777 she was restrained from offering herself to a share of the fatigue and hazard expected before Ticonderoga, by the positive injunction of her husband. The day after the conquest of the place, he was badly wounded and she crossed the Lake Champlain to join him.

"As soon as he recovered, Lady Harriet proceeded to follow his fortunes through the campaign, and at Fort Edward, or at the next camp, she acquired a two wheel tumbril, which had been constructed by the artificers of the artillery, something similar to the carriage used for the mail upon the great roads in England. Major Ackland commanded the British grenadiers, which were attached to General Fraser's corps; and consequently were always the most advanced post of the army. Their situations were often so alert, that no person slept out of his clothes. In one of these situations a tent, in which the Major and Lady Harriet were asleep, suddenly took fire. An orderly sergeant of grenadiers, with great hazard of suffocation, dragged out the first person he caught hold of. It proved to be the major. It happened, that in the same instant she had, unknowing what she did, and perhaps not perfectly awaked, providentially made her escape, by creeping under the walls of the back part of the tent. The first object she saw, upon the recovery of her sense, was the major on the other side, and in the same instant again in the fire, in search of her. The serjeant again saved him, but not without the major being very severely burned in his face, and different parts of his body. Every thing they had with them in the tent was consumed.

"This accident happened a little time before the army crossed the Hudson river, (13th Sept.) It neither altered the resolution nor the cheerfulness of Lady Harriet; and she continued her progress, a partaker of the fatigues of the advanced corps. The next call upon her fortitude was of a different nature, and more distressful as of longer suspense. On the march of the 19th Sept. the grenadiers being liable to action at every step, she had been directed by the major to follow the route of the artillery and baggage, which was not exposed. At the time the action begun, she found herself near a small uninhabited hut, where she alighted. When it was found the action was becoming general and bloody, the surgeon of the hospital took possession of the same place, as the most convenient for the first care of the wounded.—Thus was this lady in hearing of one continued fire of cannon and musketry, for four hours together, with the presumption, from the post of her husband at the head of the grenadiers, that he was in the most exposed part of the action. She had three female companions, the Baroness of Reidesel, and the wives of two British officers, major Hanage and Lieutenant Reynell; but in the event their presence served but little for comfort. Major Hanage was soon brought to the surgeon very badly wounded; and a little time after came intelligence that Lieutenant Reynell was shot dead. Imagination will want no help to figure the state of the whole group.

"From the date of that action to the 7th of October, Lady Harriet, with her usual serenity, stood prepared for new trials! and it was her lot that their severity increased with their number. She was again exposed to the hearing of the whole action, and at last received the word of her individual misfortune, mixed with the intelligence of the general calamity: the troops were defeated, and major Ackland, desperately wounded, was a prisoner.

"The day of the 8th was passed by Lady Harriet and her companions in uncommon anxiety; not a tent, not a shed being standing, except what belonged to the Hospital, their refuge was among the wounded and the dying.

"When the army was upon the point of moving, I received a message from Lady Harriet, submitting to my decision a proposal (and expressing an earnest solicitude to execute it, if not interfering with my design) of passing to the camp of the enemy, and requesting General Gates's permission to attend her husband.

"Though I was ready to believe, (for I had experienced) that patience and fortitude, in a supreme degree, were to be found, as well as every other virtue, under the most tender forms, I was astonished at this proposal. After so long an agitation, exhausted not only for want of rest, but absolutely want of food, drenched in rain for twelve hours together, that a woman should be capable of such an undertaking as delivering herself to the enemy, probably in the night; and uncertain of what hands she might first fall into, appeared an effort above human nature. The assurance I was enabled to give was small indeed; I had not even a cup of wine to offer; but I was told she had found, from some kind and fortunate hand, a little rum and dirty water. All I could furnish to her was an open boat, and a few lines, written upon dirty and wet paper, to General Gates, recommending her to his protection.

"Mr. Brudenell, the chaplain to the artillery (the same gentleman who had officiated so signally at General Fraser's funeral) readily undertook to accompany her, and with one female servant, and the major's valet-de-chambre, (who had a ball which he had received in the late action then in his shoulder) she rowed down the river to meet the enemy. But her distresses were not yet at an end. The night was advanced before the boat reached the enemy's out post, and the sentinel would not let it pass, nor even come on the shore. In vain Mr. Brudenell offered the flag of truce, and represented the state of the extraordinary passenger. The guard, apprehensive of treachery, and punctilious to their orders, threatened to fire into the boat if it stirred before day-light. Her anxiety and sufferings were thus protracted through 7 or 8 dark cold hours; and her reflections upon that first reception could not give her very encouraging ideas of the treatment she was afterwards to expect. But it is due to justice at the close of this adventure to say, that she was received and accommodated by General Gates with all the humanity and respect that her rank, her merits, and her fortune deserved.

"Let such as are affected by these circumstances of alarm, hardship, and danger, recollect, that the subject of them was a woman; of the most tender and delicate frame; of the gentlest manners; habituated to all the soft elegancies, and refined enjoyments, that attend high birth and fortune; and far advanced in a state in which tender cares, always due to the sex, become indispensably necessary. Her mind alone was formed for such trial."

GENERAL WILKINSON'S RELATION.

"The day, (9th Oct.) wasted without a movement to the front, excepting parties of observation, and the night found us on our old ground. About ten o'clock I was advised from the advanced guard on the river, that a batteau under a flag of truce had arrived from the enemy, with a lady on board, who bore a letter to General Gates, from General Burgoyne

"Major Henry Dearborn (since Major General) who commanded the guard, was ordered to detain the flag until the morning; the night being exceedingly dark, & the quality of the lady unknown. As this incident has been grossly misrepresented to the injury of the American character, which in arms is that of courage, clemency, and humanity; to correct the delusions which have flowed from Gen. Burgoyne's pen, who, although the vehicle could not have been the author of the calumny—I am authorized by General Dearborn to make the following statement, in which I place entire confidence. His guard occupied a cabin, in which there was a back apartment appropriated to his own accommodation: the party on board the boat attracted the attention of the sentinel, and he had not hailed ten minutes, before she struck the shore; the lady was immediately conveyed into the apartment of the Major, which had been cleared for her reception; her attendants followed with her baggage and necessaries, and fire was made, and her mind was relieved from the horrors which oppressed it, by the assurance of her husband's safety; she took tea, and was accommodated as comfortably as circumstances would permit, and the next morning when I visited the guard before sunrise, her boat had put off, and was floating down the stream to our camp, where General Gates, whose gallantry will not be denied, stood ready to receive her with all the respect and tenderness to which her rank and condition gave her a claim: indeed the feminine figure, the benign aspect, and polished manners of this charming woman, were alone sufficient to attract the sympathy of the most obdurate; but if another motive could have been wanting to inspire respect, it was furnished by the peculiar circumstances of Lady Harriet, then in that most delicate situation, which cannot fail to interest the solicitudes of every being possessing the form of a man: it was therefore the foulest injustice to brand an American officer with the failure of courtesy, where it was so highly merited. Major Ackland had set out for Albany, where he was joined by his lady."

We are enabled to add from the same authority, (Gen. W's. Memoirs,) the tragic sequel of this interesting story.

In consequence of the situation of Lady Harriet, General Wilkinson used his endeavours, with success, to procure the conditional exchange of Major Ackland, with permission to remove to New-York. There, Major Ackland effected his exchange against Major Otho Williams, at that time a prisoner on Long Island. Pending the negotiation for this purpose, Major Ackland made this wounded officer an inmate of his house, where Lady Harriet's attention alleviated his sufferings. We approach with reluctance the catastrophe of our tale. General Wilkinson has feelingly related it.

"But unfortunate was the destiny of this gallant, generous, high-minded gentleman; and it cannot be listened to by an American without deep regret, when it is known he gave his life in defence of their honour. I have the following detail from an English gentleman in whom I place confidence:—Ackland, after his return to England, procureda regiment, and at a dinner of military men, where the courage of the Americans was made a question, took the negative side with his usual decision; he was opposed, warmth ensued, and he gave the lie direct to a Lieutenant Lloyd, fought him, and was shot through the head. Lady Harriet lost her senses, and continued deranged two years; after which, I have been informed, she married Mr. Brudenell, who accompanied her from General Burgoyne's camp, when she sought her wounded husband on the Hudson river."

Law Intelligence.

SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

April 4, 1818, present all the judges.

Commonwealth v. Oliver Caulk, Habeas Corpus.

The court this morning gave an important decision in the above case. It was a writ of Habeas Corpus, directed to the keeper of the debtors apartment of the city and county of Philadelphia, who returned that he detained the body of the defendant, by virtue of a warrant, issued by the brigade inspector of the 1st brigade, 1st division of Pennsylvania Militia, to collect a fine of two dollars, for not turning out on the days of training, pursuant to the militia law. The defendant, who is one of the people called quakers, had never made any election to be enrolled or to have his name placed on the list of exempts, and the court were of opinion that it was not required of him to do any act, or make any declaration expressive of his desire to be considered as an exempt; the mere circumstance of his silence, (they said) was sufficient to authorize his name being placed in that class. But the court also declared their decided opinion, that the proceedings of the court of appeal, who had jurisdiction of the case, were conclusive, and could not be inquired into, either on a suit against the officers, or on a Habeas Corpus. On another point, relative to the form of the warrant, the court at present gave no opinion; but they intimidated that they would deliver it on Monday, the 13th of this month.—Am. Cent.

The following paragraph from the last Richmond Inquirer may be considered as indicative of the present feelings of the conductors of that paper at a time, which, in some of the newspapers, has been denominated the era of "good feelings."

We learn that in the debate on Internal Improvement, Mr. Clay laid considerable stress on the encroachments of the states—that he first instanced the conduct of Massachusetts in withholding her militia during the late war; and that he next spoke with some asperity of the decision of the court of appeals of Virginia, in the case of Martin and Hunter.—Virginia cannot however change her constitutional principles to please Mr. Clay. She cannot fly from the interpretation of the constitution, which was urged by the Republicans on the Panic bill in 93—that measure which Mr. Marshal describes as having "contributed not inconsiderably to the complete organization of those distinct and visible parties which in their long and dubious conflict for power, have since shaken the United States to their centre." We must thank Mr. Clay for the parallel he has drawn between Massachusetts and Virginia—We only regret that it has come from such a man as Henry Clay. We honour his talents—but we reverence the constitution. Let others change their views—Virginia will still cling to her principles.

☞ But Massachusetts, it seems, must not, except at the risk of Virginia proscription. The militia question in Massachusetts was a constitutional one, solemnly and repeatedly adjudicated.—[Ed. Union

It might have been supposed that the real circumstances attending the late explosion on the Brandywine, were, in themselves sufficiently extraordinary and lamentable to satiate the most voracious appetite for the wonderful, and that no embellishment of the fancy was necessary to excite the interest or attention of the public, in relation to that sad catastrophe. But contrary to this reasonable expectation, the most extravagant and even marvellous statements have been circulated. We have seen a narrative of this description, which has obtained a wide circulation, and which concludes a history of events, the greater part of which are imaginary, by the following incident.

"We learn that the only article unhurt in the house of Mr. Dupont, was a portrait of Napoleon Bonaparte."

We do not entertain a hope that the deliverance of Napoleon from St. Helena will be effected by omens of this kind; otherwise, (so willing are we that such an event should be realized,) we would not attempt to dissipate this delusion, but rather endeavour to confide in it ourselves. But truth requires from us to state, and from the best authority that there was no portrait of Napoleon Bonaparte in the house of Mr. Dupont, at the time of the explosion, and consequently, that this miraculous incident, like most modern miracles, existed only in the imagination of the inventor.

St. Louis, Feb. 10, 1818——1awtf.

PITTSBURGH,

TUESDAY, APRIL 21, 1818.

I am convinced says the editor of the Baltimore Register, by casting together some things which are notorious, that three fourths of the stock of the Bank of the United States was originally taken by less than 100 persons, and that four fifths of the whole of it that remains in the United States, now is in the hands of less than fifty.

Com. Aury has been liberated from confinement in Charleston, S. C. on a hearing before Judge Crayton.

Several of the citizens of Philadelphia have presented to Commodore DECATUR, an elegant service of plate, in testimony of their high sense of the brilliant services he has rendered his country.

Late Gibraltar papers contradict the story of the brutal conduct of the Dey of Algiers.

The New-Orleans Gazette, of the 2d ult. mentions that no doubt remains of the exit of the gallant Mina. He was executed immediately after he was made prisoner. It is reported, that twenty-four Spanish officers have been executed to revenge his death

Heavy rains at the South.—Several of our Southern papers mention that very considerable damage has been sustained by the heavy rains, which had swelled the rivers to an unprecedented height. Mills, bridges, fences and other property, situated on the margin of the Potomac, Shenandoah, James and Cape Fear rivers, were greatly injured. Considerable damage was done to the public property at Harper's Ferry.—The Fayetteville (N. C.) paper states that the Cape Fear river, had risen on the 23d of March to the perpendicular height of fifty-five feet; and adds, that "there has not been a period within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, now living, of such repeated freshets, in any one season, as has occurred during the last."

[A man must live on a mountain to be sure of being undisturbed, where there are such freshets and rivers.]

SLAVE TRADE.

To demonstrate the eagerness of the adored Ferdinand, in the prosecution of the slave trade, until the time at which he is pledged to abolish it, requires but to mention the fact, that during only five months of the present summer, there were introduced into Havana, fifteen thousand five hundred and thirty four slaves from the coast of Africa, averaging near one thousand per week! By this accursed traffic there have not been less than twenty five thousand miserable wretches transported to the same place during the year past, the greater part of whom, no doubt, means have been devised to convey into the United States, as affording a favourable mart for the completion of those enterprizes. It would be a desirable proceeding on the part of our government, if they would render the introduction of slaves into this country a criminal instead of a finable offence; for certainly there are few transactions in the catalogue of human wickedness that require a more effectual prohibition either as it regards the internal police of these states, or the due administration of that justice which reprobates crimes as being in contravention of the divine law.

Balt. Patriot.

Captain Hazzard, from Campeachy, informs, that the Spanish frigate Iphegenie, had put in from La Vera Cruz, with two millions of dollars, which had been landed, and the frigate condemned as unseaworthy—she had nine Americans on board, who had been taken prisoners from the Patriots and were on their way to the fortress of Ceuta, in Africa; they were in close confinement when capt. Hazzard sailed, and denied all communication with their countrymen—Mr. W. D. Robinson of Philadelphia is one of them.—Relf.

The following is particularly worthy of the notice of directors of banking establishments, stock and exchange brokers, and of merchants and others, in general, whose counting houses are so frequently the subjects of depredation, where they contain notes and deposits of value.—

The construction and properties of Bramah's patent lock, in which the confidence of the public has so long reposed, having become a subject of discussion at the meetings of the Royal Institution, Mr. Bramah attended, and exhibited a large model, explanatory of the principles of his late father's lock and his own improvements upon it, to the institution; when every one was satisfied with the almost utter impossibility of opening locks upon this construction, their security depending upon the doctrine of combinations or multiplication of numbers into each other, which is known to increase in the most rapid proportion.—Thus a lock of five sliders admits of 3000 variations, while one of eight, which are commonly made, will have no less than 1,935,360 changes, or, in other words, that number of attempts at making a key, or at picking it may be made, before it can be opened. Such was the case in the lifetime of its late ingenious inventor: but, by the simple improvement of his sons, the present manufacturers, this difficulty may be increased an hundred fold, or in a greater proportion, without at all adding to the complication of the lock.—Analectic Mag.

The Parliament of Lower Canada, on the 17th of March, rejected (by a vote of 20 to 16) a proposition to consider the expediency of granting a compensation to the members to defray their expences in attending the sessions of parliament.

ALBANY, (N. Y.) March 27.

Extraordinary Sheriff's Sale.—We learn from the Cooperstown Watch Tower, that a meeting house with the appurtenances, the property of a Congregation in Middlefield, is seized by the Sheriff of the county, and will be exposed to public sale on the 9th day of May next.

From the Boston Intelligencer.

Many Old Revolutionary Warriors amounting to about 220 men have appeared before the Hon. Judge DAVIS, during the past week, to present their claims for pensions under the act of Congress, passed on the 11th ultimo. These Old Veterans, seemed to be chiefly common Soldiers or inferiour Officers. A few of them were upon crutches; others were bent down by age and disease; but some of them showed the remains of their former ardour, and their martial spirit still "fir'd the glazing eye."—Their general aspect however was squallid, mean and needy.

The interest of the scene chiefly arose from the associations which the contrast, between the present prosperity of the country they had contributed to defend, and their own decay of vigour awakened in the mind. The nation at length has come to the determination, to pay these men in their old age who during the period of their active services they allowed to suffer for want. It was delightful to consider the comfort they were now destined to receive, which would relieve them from all apprehensions for the future; and shed the mellow light of content upon the threshold of the tomb.

The notice of the Secretary of War, requiring each claimant in his declaration to make oath that from his reduced circumstances in life, he needs the assistance of his country for support, is attended with much inconvenience. Some old persons whom the pension would make comfortable, might yet be able to exist without receiving their due, and as the act does not in its terms dictate that this oath should be made, it is rather onerous absolutely to require it.

WASHINGTON CITY, April 8.

We find that several papers continue to inculcate the opinion that war with Spain is a probable event; deriving this impression from the remark which fell from Mr. FORSYTH in the discussion on the neutrality bill. That remark, as we observed at the time, we were certain did not look to a proposition for war; and we can now state, with the same confidence, that circumstances have rendered it very probable that no proposition will be made by Mr. Forsyth, during the present session, touching our relations with Spain. He had intended, we understand, when he signified his purpose to prove the responsibility of the Spanish government, to introduce into the House thro' the committee on foreign relations, of which he is chairman, a motion to authorise the Executive to take possession of the Spanish territory of East Florida; but, on submitting the proposition to the committee of foreign relations, he was overruled by a majority of that body, and, finding from the subsequent declarations of Mr. CLAY that he should oppose such a measure, and other indications of hostility to such a motion in the House, Mr. F. became convinced that the attempt would be fruitless at this session, and has accordingly abandoned his purpose of bringing it forward.

[Intelligencer.

NEW-ORLEANS, March 4.

On Friday night about 11 o'clock three of the guard patrolling the lowing part of Bourbon street met a man with a bundle on his head; they informed him that it was necessary for him to proceed with them to the guard house, to which he assented without hesitation. On the way he dropped his bundle as if by accident, and one of the gens d'armes stooping to pick it up the fellow drew a dirk and stabbed him to the heart. He immediately commenced running, being pursued by the two surviving gens d'armes, he fired a pistol at the nearest one, and made his escape. The bundle was secured and contained shoes, which had no doubt been stolen.

From the Boston Palladium, April 7.

FROM INDIA.

Captain, Austin, who arrived yesterday from Bombay, favored us with papers to the 15th Dec. and a manuscript account of a revolt against the British by the Rajah of Berar—whose troops, consisting of upwards of 20,000 men, made a treacherous attack on the British force at Nagpore, on the night of the 28th of Nov. but were completely defeated, and the Rajah sued for peace again. The British force is stated at only 1500 men—and had 100 killed and wounded. Among the former are Capt. Saddler, Lts. Grant and Clark, As. Surg. Niven, and Mr. Southerly. Among the wounded, Capts. Charlesworth, Pew and Lloyd—Lts. Bayley, Thullier, Smith and Hearsay. After the attack, the British were reinforced.

The above event was preceded by the revolt of the Paishwa of Poonah—and a battle, in which he was defeated with the loss of 500 men. His force at the time consisted of 30,000—that of the British 3000. The war with him is continued.

The British obtained a victory over another enemy (Mahrattas) at Keerkee about the 5th of Nov.

Hostilities still existed with the Pindarees; and different exigencies caused movements of troops in various directions. Captain Austin sailed from Bombay on the 17th of December, and informs, that the inhabitants of the country between Madras and Bombay were in a state of insurrection, and committing many murders and outrages. The earl of Moira was marching against them with 90,000 troops. Every European officer and soldier had left Bombay, to join the army.

THE MANSION OF REST.

OH who that has gazed in the stillness of even
On the fast fading hues of the west,
Has not seen afar on the bosom of heaven,
Some bright little mansion of rest?
And wept that the path to a region so fair,
Should be shrouded by sadness and fears;
That the night winds of sorrow misfortune and care,
Should sweep o'er the wild rolling waves of despair,
To darken this cold world of tears.

Yet who that hath gazed—has not longed for the hour
When misfortune and sorrow shall cease,
And hope, like the rainbow, display thro' the shower,
Her bright written promise of peace.
And oh! if that rainbow of promise shall shine,
On the last scene of life's chequer'd gloom;
May its blaze, in the moment of parting be mine—
I ask but one ray from a source so divine,
To light the dark vale of the tomb.

MARRIED on Tuesday evening last, by the rev. Mr. NEWCOMB, Mr. SAMUEL JOHNSTON to Mrs. MARGARET WITHINGTON, all of this city.
